

Before you walk in.

A short reset to do at the door — eight things worth remembering before you knock.

1 Slow your pace.

They are not in a hurry. You shouldn't be either.

2 Plan for twenty minutes — at least.

Tech help is rarely a five-minute job. Allow time, or come back later.

3 The phone is probably not broken.

Most "broken phones" are a setting, a stray swipe, or a notification.

4 You're here to teach — not to fix.

Resist the urge to take the device and do it yourself.

5 They can't break it. Say so out loud.

Fear of breaking the device is a real, well-documented barrier. Lift it early.

6 Bring paper and a pen.

Written steps outlast your visit. Their phone won't remind them tomorrow.

7 Small mistakes are teaching moments.

Don't bark "Don't click that!" — let the harmless click happen, then explain.

8 The visit isn't really about the device.

It's about confidence, connection, and being seen.
