

While you're helping.

Six things worth remembering during the visit. Our speed is their disorientation; our patience is their dignity.

---

Eyes & reading

---

- › Make the text bigger before anything else.
- › Hold the screen where they can see it — not where you can.
- › Name the icon. Don't just point at it.

Memory & load

---

- › Write the steps on paper before you leave.
- › Teach one reliable path, not three.
- › Always end by showing the way home.

Updates & change

---

- › Warn them before any update.
- › Stay through their first use after.
- › Defer optional updates — not every red dot needs a tap.

Hands & touch

- › Brace the device — a stylus or pencil eraser helps.
- › Older fingers linger; their tap is a long-press.
- › Turn on touch accommodations in settings.

Hearing & pace

---

- › Wait ten full seconds. Silence isn't confusion.
- › Face them — hearing aids and lip-reading need it.
- › One instruction at a time, never two.

Dignity & trust

---

- › Don't fix and run. Confirm they can do it themselves.
- › Hesitation is caution, not incompetence.
- › Let small mistakes happen — then explain.

Our work is helping elders maintain independence and connection — and empowering caregivers to support them with technology.
